A MIDNIGHT ADVENTURE.

Females often possess presence of mind, and the power of self control under circumstances of isominent peril, which seem al most foreign to their nature and beyond the endurance of a delicate physical organization.

JOHN LEADBEATER & SON, lady whose fears must have been powerfully excited, and whose life of affluence had probably never before given her nerves any severer test than is incident to the vexations of domestic cares, is given in Chamber's Journal of last month. We copy the adventure premising by way of explanation, that the lady quiet English country village, and was upon | For sale by the eve of marriage:

The wedding day was to be on the morrow of that on which our adventure happened -Grand preparations were made for the wedding; and the rector's fine old plate, and the costly gifts of the bride, were discussed with pride and pleasure at the Hare and Hounds, in the presence of some strangers who had come down to a prize-fight which had taken place in the neighborhood.

That night, Adelaide, who occupied a senarate room from her sister, sat up late-long after all the household had retired to rest .-She had had a long interview with her father and had been reading a chapter to which he had directed her attention, and since had packed up her jewels, etc. She was consequently, still dressed, when the church clock tolled midnight. As it ceased she heard a low noise like that of a file; she listened, but could distinguish nothing clearly. It might have been made by some of the servants still about, or perhaps it was only the creaking of the old trees. She heard nothing but the sighing of the winter winds for many minutes afterward. House-breakers were mere myths in primitive Thydon, and the bride elect, without a thought of tear resumed her occupation. She was gazing on a glittering set of diamonds, destined to be worn at the wedding, when her bedroom door softly opened. She turned, looked up, and beheld a man with a black mask, holding a pistel in his hand, standing before her.

She did not scream, for her first thought was for her father, who slept in the next room, and to whom any sudden alarm might be death, for he was old, feeble, and suffering from heart complaint. She confronted the robber boldly, and addressed bim in a whisper: "You are come," she said, "to rob us --Spare your soul the awful guilt of murder -My father sleeps next to my room, and to be startled from his sleep would kill him .-Make no noise, I beg of you."

The fellow was astonished and cowed --"We won't make no noise," be replied suddealy," "If you give us every thing quietly." Adelaide drew back and let him take her jewels-not without a pang, for they were precious love gifts, remarking at the same time, that two more masked ruffians stood at the half-opened door. As he took the jewelcase and watch from the table, and demanded ber purse, she asked him if he intended to go into her father's room. She received a surly affirmative: "He was'nt a going to run a risk and leave half the tin behind!" She propos ed instantly that she should go herself saying: "I will bring you whatever you wish, and you may guard me thither, and kill me if I play false to you." The fellow consulted his comrades, and after a short parley, they agreed to the proposal; and with a pistol pointed at her head, the dauntless girl erossed the passage, and entered the rector's room. Very gently she stole across the chamber, and removing his purse, watch, keys, and | Prepared by desk, gave them up to the robbers who stood at the door. The old man slept reaccfully and calmly, thus guarded by his child, who softly shut the door, and demanded if the robbers were yet satisfied.

The leader replied that they should be when they had got the show of plate spread out below, but that they could'nt let her out of sight and that she must go with them. In compliance with this mandate, she followed them down stairs to the dining room, where a splendid wedding breakfast had been laid to eave trouble and burry on the morrow. To her surprise, the fellows-eight in number when assembled-seated themselves and prepared to make a good meal. They ordered her to get them out wine, and to cut her own wedding cake for them; and then seated at the head of the table, she was compelled to preside at this extraordinary revel.

They are, and drank, laughed, and joked and Adelside, quick of ear and eye, had thus time to study, in her quiet way, the figures and voices of the whole set.

When the repast was ended, and the plate transferred to a sack, they prepared to depart, whispering together, and glancing at the young lady. For the first time Adelaide' courage gave way, and she trembled; but it was not a consultation against her; they told her that they did not wish to harm her-that she was "a jolly weach, reg'lar game," and they wouldn't hart her, but that she must swear not to give an alarm till nine or ten next day when they should be off all safe. To this she was, of course, obliged to assent, and then they all insisted on shaking hands with her. She noticed, during this parting ceremony, that one of the ruffians had only three fingers on the left hand. Alone in the despoiled room, Adelaide faint and exhausted, awaited the first gleam of day-light, then, as the robbers did not return, she stole up to her room, undressed, and fell into a disturbed slumber. The consternation of the family next morning might be imagined; and Adelaide's story was still more astounding than the fact of the robbery itself. Police was sent for from Lendon, and they guided by Adelaide's lucid description of her midnight guests, actually succeeded in carturing every one of the gang, whom the young lady bad no difficulty in identifying and swearing to-the "three fingered Jack" -being the guiding clew to the discovery .--The stolen property was nearly all recover- long celebrated It is periectly pure, beyond ed, and the old rector always declared-and all doubt, being made exclusively of rye, hops with truth-that he owed his life to the selfpossession and judgment of his eldest daugh-

The only ill effect of the great trial to her nerves, was a disposition, on the part of the young beroine, to listen for midnight sounds, and start uneasily from troubled dreams; but time and change of residence soon effected its
